

for Bernaert Foncq who is recorded as working in Antwerp between 1550-78. The Low Countries and Nuremberg were centres of metalworking and exported to this country. If it were not for the maker's stamp, we could easily be misled into assuming that the weight was as much as two centuries older; it reproduces the medieval ship used by Edward III when he introduced coins of this weight in 1351.

I am grateful to David Boast for allowing me to study the weight and to Professor Norman Biggs for identifying it. Background information on the Forth family and their Butley estate documents can be found in Untold Tales of the Suffolk Sandlings by Valerie Fenwick and Vic Harrup.
